There's no time like the present...to update your wardrobe. The arrival of spring often encourages a deep closet clean, meaning you have more room (and hopefully a little extra pocket change) to invest in some new threads, plus an accessory or two.

We've rounded up five of the newest brands (and brand launches) that have the power to reinvigorate your current clothing lineup, with the addition of just one or two pieces. Pluck an architectural shoe from Mercedes Castillo's lineup, select a cool leather jacket from Vacation and slip into a pair of vintage Givenchy-inspired trousers from Art of the Gentlewoman.

New season, new you.

Art of the Gentlewoman

Why buy? And now, something for your work wardrobe. Art of the Gentlewoman is a new direct-to-consumer destination that aims to provide a timeless and effortless wardrobe, with a refined vibe.

"To us, the modern suit lagged. It needed to be revisited and reengineered," said California-based co-founders Melissa Martinez-Booth and Melissa Kanarek. So, their first capsule collection focuses on a slouchy suit, one that will look great with both sneakers and heels.

As a bonus, the pieces are functional, too. The suit features a knit rib under the cuff, so your sleeves stay scrunched, but only when you want them to. Meanwhile, the trousers, which are based on a pair of vintage Givenchy tuxedo pants, have an easily-adjustable waist size.

What to buy? The Slouch Blazer ($280) and The Slouch Trouser ($168).
